

“Robot” is a poem about breaking away from the expectations and control of others. Through the metaphor of being a robot, it explores what it feels like to lose your voice while trying to be who others want you to be, and the realization that only you can decide who you truly are.